NewsLetter. AT.9.7 (2)

UDL: Present information in multiple ways

Universal Design for Learning (UDL) is a set of principles for curriculum development providing all individuals equal opportunities to learn.

Learners comprehend information differently. As educators, we should present info multiple ways to allow the learner access to their best way of learning. This also applies to when a child needs to express their understanding. As educators we should allow children to access multiple modes of expression.

The following link offers a brief video; it may be a little silly but the message is valuable. Please watch. http://www.udlresource.com/index.html

You may read more about the guidelines at UDLCenter.org

NATIONAL CENTER ON UNIVERSAL DESIGN for LEARNING

http://www.udlcenter.org/aboutudl/udlguidelines/principle1